7 Team Charter Trigger Items

The team’s quantified triggers were established to maintain accountability and consistent progress throughout the project lifecycle. These triggers included a limit of no more than two unexcused absences per term, a requirement for each member to maintain regular commit history and active participation in issue management, and a mandatory peer-review process for all work prior to final submission.

To date, there have been no documented violations of these triggers; in instances where a team member could not attend a meeting or fulfill a specific rule, they proactively informed the group with a valid justification, ensuring continuous alignment. However, as the project entered its final stages, the team identified that the “regular commit” trigger was structurally weak and ambiguous. It incorrectly assumed that project distribution was measured solely through code contributions, failing to account for critical non-technical deliverables such as the project poster and the final presentation slideshow.

To address this, the team held a meeting to revise the trigger to encompass regular contributions to all project facets. This updated metric now explicitly includes commits, documentation, and presentation materials. The team will continue to monitor these contributions through the final stretch of the capstone to ensure equitable workload distribution and make further adjustments as necessary.
